

Privacy Policy

- Purpose of data collection

As of now, the D-PATH tool is mainly focused on the privacy legislation of Quebec, Canada. However, there are plans to expand and update the tool to encompass other jurisdictions such as different Canadian provinces and territories, or other countries. Such an expansion would require significant levels of research and the focus of this research will be greatly prompted by D-PATH's users' expressed needs. The information collected when You engage on direct communications (email) with D-PATH' staff to inform us about the jurisdictions that You would like D-PATH to undertake will be utilized to better direct the focus of such research. In other words, the purpose of the information collected in these direct communications is to help us, the developers and researchers of D-PATH, to evaluate the direction of future updates and expansions of D-PATH.

By writing those emails to us and providing us the information we request, You are granting Your consent for us to collect the information contained in such an email for the purposes mentioned above.

- Information collected

In general, the use of the D-PATH tool does not require the collection of any personal information, as none of the answers You provide while engaging in the assessment that D-PATH does can identify You. The only instance where D-PATH's staff will collect information that may be considered personal at a specific point in time is when and if You decide to send us an email with the information about the country to which You project is attached and that is not included in the current version of D-PATH. The information that we will collect in this instance will be Your full name, the e-mail address from which You are writing to us, and any information You want to share with us about Your project or organization. This information will be used only to help us, the developers and researchers of D-PATH, to evaluate the direction of future updates and expansions of D-PATH. We will not recontact you or send you any communication.

We do not collect any information on the Internet Protocol (IP) address of the computer you are using, the browser or device you use, the date and time of your use of D-PATH or any other form of analytics. We do not use cookies either.

- Right to withdraw or rectify

If at any point, You want to update, rectify or erase the information You have provided us, You are entitled to do so. Just send us and email to admin@c3g.ca.

- Confidentiality and privacy

In accordance with the applicable national and/or provincial laws of Canada, we will protect the information You provide us in the instance described above (direct e-mail to us to inform us about the country to which You project is attached and that is not included in the current version of D-PATH). Any personal information will be kept exclusively confidential with the developers of D-PATH and used only in purposes consistent with those described above.

Should you have any inquiry or question regarding our Privacy policy, please send it to us at admin@c3g.ca
